When Mishon and Brandon Williams drove up to a new home under construction on their first day out house-hunting with their real estate agent, they immediately knew they had found the place of their dreams. The residence had everything that the young, successful couple (and expecting parents, at the time) needed: an expansive and open floorplan with interesting room designs and natural light throughout, paired with a setting in the alluring and well-established neighborhood of Morningside, complete with a top-notch school district and proximity to popular attractions such as Piedmont Park, Atlanta Botanical Garden, Buckhead and Midtown. An added bonus? The structure was only half-finished, meaning they would be able to tailor it to best suit their needs.

Mongolian lamb chairs from Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams, a brass and ivory ottoman from King's Home Furnishings and a shagreen and marble side table from Modify Home complete the adult oasis for new parents Mishon and Brandon Williams.
